

THE NATIONAL GALLERY

YOUNG

AMBASSADORS

The Young Ambassadors is the National Gallery's young patrons programme designed for young professionals aged 20 to 45. Named after Holbein's 'The Ambassadors', the programme offers an opportunity for younger arts philanthropists to support the Gallery and enjoy close access to its collection and experts.

Learning is at the core of this programme as the Young Ambassadors explore the story of European art through insider access to the collection; discovering how artists of the past – Rubens, Titian, Turner, Cézanne, Constable, Van Gogh, Monet – continue to inspire artists of today.

YOUR SUPPORT

With the launch of the Young Ambassadors, the National Gallery is delighted to welcome a new generation of supporters.

'The Ambassadors' was the first painting that the Gallery acquired with the help of private donors and symbolises the power of philanthropy – for over a hundred years, 'The Ambassadors' has been on view to the public, seen thousands of times a day. It is testament to the importance of individual giving and we are extremely grateful for your support, which will contribute towards the care of our paintings and ensuring that they can be enjoyed by the public in perpetuity.

We look forward to welcoming you to the National Gallery family.

A GALLERY

FOR ALL

Established in 1824 by Parliament, the National Gallery collection was intended for the enjoyment of the public, welcoming people from all socioeconomic backgrounds. Nearly two hundred years later, this principle endures with over 6 million visitors annually enjoying free entry to the Gallery.

In recent years, the National Gallery has sought to broaden its collection beyond its former Western European remit. This has involved notable acquisitions including an American painting- George Bellows' Men of the Docks and a Danish painting- Laurits Andersen Ring's Road in the Village of Baldersbrønde.

The National Gallery is committed to ensuring that current and future visitors of all ages and backgrounds can discover and be inspired by its collection, encouraging innovative learning experiences and new points of view.

Young Ambassadors represent a range of nationalities and backgrounds, enabling the collection to be viewed through a multi-faceted lens.
